5 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

WOMAN WOUNDS THREE AT YOUTUBE HQ BEFORE KILLING HERSELF

IA woman opened fire at YouTube's headquarters near San Francisco on Tuesday, wounding at least three people before taking her own life, as employees of the video website scrambled into the surrounding streets for safety.

Police did not release any further information on the suspect or comment on her possible motives for the shooting rampage at the Silicon Valley offices of YouTube, a service owned by Alphabet Inc.'s Google.

The shooting had no known connection to terrorism, a U.S. government security official told Reuters.

A YouTube product manager, Todd Sherman, described on Twitter hearing people running, first thinking it was an earthquake before he was told that a person had a gun.

"At that point every new person I saw was a potential shooter. Someone else said that the person shot out the back doors and then shot themselves," Sherman said on Twitter. "I looked down and saw blood drips on the floor and stairs. Peaked around for threats and then we headed downstairs and out the front," Sherman said.

Responding to the report of gunfire, police officers entered the building and located at least four people with gunshots, San Bruno Police Chief Ed Barberini said at a news conference. One of them, a woman with a self-inflicted wound, was dead, he said, and she was believed to be the shooter. One of the victims, a 36-year-old man, was listed in critical condition at San Francisco General Hospital. A 32-year-old woman was listed in serious condition and a 27-year-old woman in fair condition. Authorities did not release names of the victims.

Right now, a ticket for parking during overnight street-cleaning hours costs you $40, but that might go up to $90 under proposed changes on parking fines from the city of Boston. The idea, officials announced, is to use the money from these higher fines to fund other transportation efforts across the city. Are you OK with getting a steeper ticket if it brings about other benefits? Read more on page 5 and at metro.boston.us about the proposed changes and what they could fund.

TRUMP: SEND MILITARY TO BORDER UNTIL WALL BUILT

2 President Donald Trump sharpened his anti-immigration rhetoric on Tuesday, saying he wants to deploy U.S. military forces to the Mexican border to stop illegal immigrants until his long-promised wall is built and "proper security" is in place. His comments, following a threat to halt foreign aid to Honduras and other countries unless they stopped a "caravan" of Central Americans headed to the United States, immediately raised questions about troop deployment on U.S. soil. Trump called using the military at the southern border "a big step." He met on Tuesday with U.S. Defense Secretary James Mattis and others to discuss the idea. "Until we can have a wall and proper security we're going to be guarding our border with the military," Trump told reporters at the White House, lamenting what he called "horrible" U.S. laws that left the southern border poorly protected. After 14 months in office, Trump still hammers regularly on an anti-immigration theme that helped to energize conservative Republican voters who helped him win the presidency in the 2016 election.

APPLICATIONS POUR IN FOR MASS POT LICENSEES

3 Marijuana regulators could approve the first prospective marijuana businesses for expedited licensing next week, after the Massachusetts Cannabis Control Commission's staff is able to review more than 200 applications that were started in the first 24 hours since the commission began accepting applications. The CCC began accepting applications at noon Monday to be part of its priority certification process, which is open to registered marijuana dispensaries (RMDs) and those eligible to apply through the CCC's economic empowerment program. Executive Director Shawn Collins told the CCC on Tuesday there had been 274 user accounts created and 218 total applications started between the noon launch on Monday and the CCC's meeting on Tuesday. Of the 218 applications, 129 were seeking to be approved for priority review as part of the program that the CCC put in place to "ensure that people from communities that have been disproportionately harmed by marijuana law enforcement are included in the new legal marijuana industry." The remaining 89 applications were started by RMDs seeking to sell marijuana to adults who are not medical patients.

FACEBOOK DELETES POSTS FROM 'TROLL FACTORY'

4 Facebook is expanding its response to people using the platform improperly and on Tuesday said it had deleted hundreds of Russian accounts and pages associated with a "troll factory" indicted by prosecutors for fake activist and political posts in the 2016 U.S. election campaign. Facebook said many of the deleted articles and pages came from Russia-based Federal News Agency, known as FAN, and that the social media company's security team had concluded that the agency was technologically and structurally intertwined with the St.

Petersburg-based Internet Research Agency. Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg told Reuters in an exclusive interview that the agency "has repeatedly acted to deceive people and manipulate people around the world, and we don't want them on Facebook anywhere." The world's largest social media company is under pressure to improve its handling of data after disclosing that information about 50 million Facebook users wrongly ended up in the hands of political consultancy Cambridge Analytica, which worked on then-candidate Donald Trump's campaign.

AMAZON FINISHES HIGHER DESPITE TRUMP THREATS

5 The largest American business lobby group came to the defense of Amazon on Tuesday after a multiday Twitter attack by President Donald Trump that included unsubstantiated criticism of the world's biggest online retailer. The value of Amazon shares held by Jeff Bezos, the online retailer's chief executive and single largest shareholder, had taken a $10 billion hit in the week since Trump began attacking him and his company on Twitter. Citing an unspecified report, Trump told reporters at the White House that the company was not paying the U.S.

Postal Service a fair rate, and that it was costing U.S. taxpayers billions of dollars and forcing other retailers out of business, and he threatened to raise rates. Late on Tuesday afternoon, a source familiar with proceedings at the White House said no specific actions addressing Trump's concerns about Amazon were on the table at the White House at this time, but that could change given Trump's dissatisfaction with the company. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the largest business lobby group in the U.S., stepped in on Tuesday to defend Amazon, which is a member.

Lack of drivers leads to more missed MBTA bus trips

Many scheduled bus trips never make it along their route, according to the MBTA, because there aren't enough drivers available.

Every day, hundreds of scheduled MBTA bus trips never make it out of the garage, and there has not been much progress solving that problem, according to T officials.

After dipping below 2 percent in the early part of 2016, the rate of dropped bus trips has climbed back up to near the level it was at during the calamitous winter of 2015.

"I think we have made a little less progress than we would have hoped to by this date," said MBTA Fiscal and Management Control Board Chairman are more difficult and more taxing for the operator," said Casey, who said drivers pick their routes on a three-month basis. She said, "If we built schedules where those difficult routes are scheduled for eight hours over and over and over again, we may seem to see those unscheduled absences."

The T is also moving from a paper schedule to a computerized schedule for employees, which Aiello said should help address staffing.

"We have been effectively on a pencil and paper rostering system every day," said Aiello. By next spring, the T will have implemented a "fully automated" scheduling system "that should improve our response time" when there is an unscheduled absence, Aiello said.

After Gov. Charlie Baker brought in new leadership at the T in 2015, reducing absenteeism became a focus for the reconfigured transit agency. Less than a year after creation of the Fiscal and Management Control Board, T officials announced there was an average of 93 dropped bus trips per weekday in the first few months of 2016.

"We are reducing absenteeism, resulting in fewer dropped trips and creating an atmosphere where good attendance is valued," said Brian Shortsleeve in June 2016, when he was chief administrator of the T. Shortsleeve is now a member of the control board.

The number of unscheduled absences increased in fiscal 2017 compared to fiscal 2016, according to Casey, who said that on average each employee took an additional 3.25 more unscheduled absence days in 2017 compared to 2016.

On an average day in the last part of 2017, the T would be about 108 operators short of the required staffing, leading to roughly 300 dropped trips, according to data presented Monday.

About 85 percent of the dropped trips were caused by a lack of sufficient personnel on hand to drive the buses, according to the T.

T officials have met with the unionized drivers to learn about their routes, according to Jess Casey, the deputy chief operating officer for service planning and strategy, who said there is some consideration for allowing drivers to "switch back and forth" between busy routes and "difficult" routes.

Boston Marathon security efforts include 8,000 safety personnel along course

Local, state and federal public safety officials outlined their security plan, which took six months to coordinate, for the 122nd Boston Marathon.

kristin.toussaint@metro.us

With the 122nd Boston Marathon less than two weeks away, public safety officials from local, state and federal organizations Tuesday outlined security for the event.

It's been five years since the 2013 Boston Marathon bombings, an event Boston FBI Special Agent Harold Shaw noted that the city, and the world, will never forget.

Security efforts have become stronger since 2013, Shaw said. Though officials noted that since 2013 security measures at the marathon have been heightened, and there are no specific threats to this year's race, there will still be a strong security presence leading up to and on April 16.

There will be about 8,000 public safety personnel deployed across all eight cities and towns that the marathon cuts through, of which nearly 5,000 will be uniformed and plain clothes law enforcement officers.

Local, state and federal organizations are involved, including Boston police, transit police, 150 FBI personnel, the National Guard, the Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency and more.

These officials have been planning the security measures for the past six months. The safety plan includes three main goals, officials said: to provide a safe and secure environment through appropriate security measures, to ensure that the marathon remains a family-friendly event and to enable coordination and communication across the eight regions, the dozens of supporting agencies and the Boston Athletic Association.

"We are doing everything we can to encourage people of all ages to come out on marathon day, along the 26 miles to view the race, cheer the runners and celebrate Patriots Day," said Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency Director Kurt Schwartz at a news conference.

Officials are asking for the public to help in safety efforts, as well. Spectators are not allowed to bring backpacks, over-the-shoulder bags, roller bags or coolers, officials said. Instead, spectators are asked to bring their possessions in clear plastic bags; all bags will also be subject to search.

Glass bottles, cans and any container than can hold more than 1 liter of liquid are prohibited, as are large blankets, costumes that cover the face, any weapons or any item that might be used as a weapon, including sticks, polls, signs and props.

Boston Athletic Association Executive Director Tom Grilk said that the safety officers set a standard to which others "can only aspire."

"They are ready to prevent things from happening," he said. "No matter what. No matter how unimaginably horrible it may be. Their performance resonates around the world."

Parking fines in Boston could go up to fund transportation projects

Double parking or leaving your car during overnight street cleaning may soon become even more costly as the city of Boston looks to raise the price of parking tickets.

Mayor Marty Walsh announced on Tuesday a slew of transportation changes in the works to upgrade infrastructure and make commuting around the city both safer and more affordable.

To help fund those projects, city officials proposed restructuring 11 parking fines for the first time in 10 years — in one case, increasing a fine by $50.

Raising fines would help fund improvement efforts, officials said, as well as reduce congestion, increase cleanliness in the city and improve the overall parking experience as, hopefully, more people will be deterred from breaking the rules.

Under the proposed changes, the fine for wrongfully parking in a resident permit spot would go from $40 to $60. Double parking would go up to $55 from $30 for one zone, and to $75 from $45 in another zone.

Parking in a loading zone could soon get you a $90 fine, up from $55, and being over a parking meter time limit would cost you $40, up from $25.

The biggest fine increase would come from

$50

Amount of largest increase in parking fines for a single offense parking during overnight street cleaning hours: Once a $40 offense, the new changes would raise that error to a $90 fine.

"Increasing various parking fines that have not been adjusted since 2008 and allocating those funds to improve the city's ability to better manage its transportation services is a smart public policy that will lead to more reliable commutes," said Sam Tyler, president of the Boston Municipal Research Bureau, in a statement.

Similar to when the city raised some parking meter prices for the first time since 2011, officials noted that this upgrade would bring Boston in line with the practices of other major cities.

Double parking costs drivers $100 in Chicago, $110 in San Francisco and $115 in New York City.

Officials hope raising fines will help cover the $5 million investments outlined in the city's Fiscal Year 2019 budget. Those investments, which will add to the ongoing efforts of Go Boston 2030, include strengthening bus transit through the city's first-ever "Transit Team," which will work with the MBTA to design and manage dedicated bus lanes; repairing more than 1,600 miles of sidewalks, 800 miles of roadways and more than 800 traffic signals; and adding funds to build out the city's pedestrian network, bike network and Vision Zero efforts.

Local transportation leaders, like TransitMatters, the Boston Cyclists Union and Transportation for Massachusetts, have come out in support of Walsh's announcement and the expected changes. Residents seem to support the move as well, even though it may mean a higher parking ticket.

In fact, responding to the news, some residents said the fines should be raised even higher to curb the behavior. "Sounds like [the city] caught up with the fact that an expired meter ticket can be cheaper than a garage," one person wrote on Twitter. Another on Reddit said that the double parking fines should be "much higher."

"$150 at least," they wrote. "You won't stop the behavior unless you make it hurt." KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

Top chefs bring gourmet popcorn to Boston movie theater

Popcorn drenched in "butter" may be the quintessential snack for any film-going experience, but a Boston movie theater is putting a gourmet spin on the fan-favorite treat.

ShowPlace Icon, the luxury theater that recently opened in the Seaport District, has enlisted some of the city's top chefs to create delicious new takes on movie theater popcorn this spring. The treats made their debut earlier this month, and will rotate flavors crafted by different chefs each month through March 31, 2019.

"We are pretty excited to build on this menu staple with these incredibly creative seasonal popcorns," ShowPlace Icon CEO Tony Kerasotes said in a statement. "In my family's 109 years in the industry, I've never seen anything like this done. It has been a top priority of ours to collaborate with the most talented Bostonians."

The monthly chef popcorn menu kicks off on Sunday with a sticky bun version of the snack that comes with roasted pecans. The sweet take on the treat was created by acclaimed chef Joanne Chang, co-owner of Flour Bakery.

Celebrities! They're nothing at all like us.

As we mere mortals still shiver, famous faces have suffered through the cold the best way they know how: by leaving town.

Mark Wahlberg gave us a bare-chested shout-out poolside from the Bahamas after giving up posting videos of himself online for his 40 days of Lent. Because that's what Jesus would do.

"This Is Us" star Mandy Moore was also closer to God this Easter after trudging through seven different ecosystems to summit a snowy Mount Kilimanjaro in Tanzania during her eight-day trek. Posting a selfie with friends on Africa's highest peak, she offered wise words to those who plan to follow in her (sponsored) footsteps; "Kilimanjaro demands a lot from those who traverse her trails," she posted. "You have no choice but to show up. And we did."

Also feeling the rain in Africa was "Will & Grace's" Debra Messing, who traveled with her son to Kenya and Tanzania. They visited the baby elephant she sponsors through the David Sheldrick Wildlife Trust. Along with posting animal antics, Messing also provided the internet with the obligatory celebrity naked-bathtub-with-a-view selfie.

nifer Garner. She flew with her kids to Hawaii to spend Easter with her back-tatted ex Ben Affleck, who is in Oahu shooting "Triple Frontier."

The chic hotspot of celebrity choice this season is Tahiti, with private jets full of celebs hitting French Polynesia. Portia di Rossi shared snaps of wife Ellen DeGeneres on a working vacay in Tahiti (where the couple previously hung with Margot Robbie and the Obamas), as well as a video of Ellen floating with tropical fish that contained the obligatory "Finding Dory" reference.

Jennifer Aniston and fellow "Friends" alum-

Of course, friends that sun together stay together. Chris Hemsworth has once again showed off Australian surfing Mecca Byron Bay to his Hollywood pals. Matt Damon and family joined the "Thor" actor and his famous wife, Elsa Pataky in town.

When he wasn't at the beach being papped, Hemsworth focused on the local festival season, sporting an epic porn stache.

NEW RIVALS FOR C'S, B'S

The Boston sports scene has been in the business of developing new rivals in the past year as the Pats are no longer indifferent to the Jacksonville Jaguars or Philadelphia Eagles. As for the two teams that play at the Garden, who are both just days away from starting their respective playoff journeys, the Celtics and Bruins also have new rivals.

The Celtics will meet the Raptors for the second time in four days Wednesday in Toronto with tons of playoff implications on the line. Meanwhile the Bruins just wrapped up their regular season series with the Lightning, who they saw three times over the course of the past three weeks. It just feels like the C's will face DeMar DeRozan and the Raptors at some point this postseason, and the B's will take on Nikita Kucherov and the Lightning at some point in the month of May as well.

NO 'DILLY! DILLY!' AT MASTERS

The stuffiest people on planet Earth will be in Augusta, Georgia, this week for The Masters golf tournament, and while you will hear the chirping of fake birds, you will NOT hear the popular Bud Light catch phrase, "Dilly! Dilly!"

Patrons who are caught shouting "Dilly! Dilly!" after a golfer hits his tee shot, will be removed from the course — according to a tweet by Bunkered Golf Magazine editor Bryce Ritchie. Ritchie says that security staff at Augusta were given a sheet with a list of sayings that are prohibited and "Dilly! Dilly!" made the cut. Can't imagine the old favorites of "Ba Ba Boohey!!!" "Mashed Potatoes!!!" and "Light the Candle!!!" will be allowed either.

Truth be told, Augusta should have just let "Dilly! Dilly!" die out naturally. People were getting sick of it at the end of this past football season, so I've got to believe even by Sunday at The Masters if you shouted "Dilly! Dilly!" you'd fall under the toolbag category organically. Instead, "Dilly! Dilly!" will return at golf outings throughout the summer, out of defiance.

DIRTY DONTÉ

Americans love building celebrities up and equally enjoy tearing them down, but that occurred at an unbelievably rapid pace in the hours after Villanova won the title as Donte DiVincenzo had the game of his life and then had to delete his Twitter account right after. Internet sleuths dove into all 17,000 of DiVincenzo's tweets — dating back to his early high school days — and discovered some inappropriate language. Many of the posts were absolutely offensive, but probably nothing different than any other 14-year-old boy was saying back in 2011.

Here is a taste of what DiVincenzo said. WARNING, these are NSFW.

"First thing my mother does is call me a little sh** lol"

"Yeah your girl has a nice body but her face is ugly as sh**."

Patriots trade away WR Cooks

Could the Pats now potentially go after Giants WR Odell Beckham?

matthew.burke@metro.us

The Patriots made a monster move late Tuesday afternoon as they traded away Brandin Cooks, their second-leading receiver from the 2017 season. Cooks is headed to the Los Angeles Rams, and in return Bill Belichick is getting Los Angeles' first-round pick in this month's draft (23rd overall). The Pats will also receive a sixth-round pick from the Rams and they are giving LA a fourth-round pick.

It's unclear whether or not the Patriots will hold onto the first round pick as Belichick is one to often trade out of the first round entirely, let alone make two selections in it. The trade also raised immediate speculation online that the Pats could be interested in making a move for disgruntled Giants wide receiver Odell Beckham Jr.

Beckham and Pats quarterback Tom Brady have been playing love tag on Instagram in recent months as Beckham posted a video of Brady and himself celebrating, respectively, with the caption, "OBJ GOAT chasin."

a Lil Wayne rap lyric on Beckham's Instagram page as Beckham posted, "Quarterback Weezy, young Tom Brady, open up ya mouth..." Brady finished the line with, "And catch a bomb baby," accompanied by a championship trophy emoji.

The mutual admiration has been going on for quite a while, even offline. In the preseason of 2016, the two exchanged jerseys after an exhibition between the Pats and Giants.

"He's a great young player and I love watching him," Brady said of Beckham at the time.

"Any time you get a chance to talk to somebody like that, [Brady] has made the playoffs for a very long time," Beckham said of the Pats QB. "It's pretty cool. It's fun to be able to sit out here and watch him."

There had been rumblings that the Patriots were looking to trade Cooks for weeks but most of the chatter occurred before and during the first week of NFL free agency. Many believed the Pats were looking to dump Cooks and perhaps use that money to spend on an elite free agent, but that did not come to fruition.

The Cooks trade also calls into question the status of Rob Gronkowski, Brady's top target in 2017. There were several reports this past weekend that suggested Gronk may be on his way out, but ESPN's Adam Brandin Cooks had 65 receptions in 2017, the second most on the Patriots behind Rob Gronkowski — who finished with 69. Cooks had seven touchdown grabs on the year as well.

Scheffter believes that the Cooks trade signals that No. 87 is here to stay.

"New England trading Brandin Cooks to LA means that the Patriots will not be trading Rob Gronkowski this offseason as some have speculated," Scheffter tweeted Tuesday night. "Pats will rely on Julian Edelman, Chris Hogan, Rob Gronkowski, amongst others."

Of note, Scheffter also tweeted, "New England is now armed with double 1s, double 2s, and in prime position to move up in the draft and select a QB if it so chooses."
